DCA Portfolio Company Decipher included on the Lead411 Tech 200 list for 2011

Decipher, a market research services firm, was included on this year's Lead411 Tech 200 list, which was released yesterday. Lead411, a business data and information company, ranked the Tech 200 based on revenue percentage growth from 2008 to 2010. Applicants had to be a privately-held business in the United States, and have earned more than $1 million in the past year.

"We experienced record-style growth over the past several years, both in revenue and job creation," said Kristin Luck, president of the market research firm. "We attribute our growth in large part to new product development and diversification - particularly as it relates to the release of our Beacon research software suite."

Beacon provides built-in functionality for users to author their own surveys, with numerous question formats, multiple languages and branding customization. A reporting portal monitors data collection in real-time, providing various downloadable data file types and the ability to quickly customize data to any level of complexity. Beacon is a full-service system that has been creating significant growth for Decipher.

In the past, Lead411 has focused on the top 500 companies, but this year's list ranks only the best of the best with 200 listings. The finalists on the list ranked highest for revenue and growth among all applicants. In addition to collecting the proper data for the ranking, Lead411 also asked voluntary questions regarding marketing and ROI to help other companies learn which activities result in profitability.

The additional survey questions found that more than 50 percent of applicants did not do any traditional advertising at all, and more than 80 percent had budget set aside for public relations. Companies saw the highest ROI from email marketing, although it only represented 10 percent of company budgets. Many more statistics were gathered and can be viewed here.
